Traditional Worship Practices in Sanatana Dharma

Traditional worship practices in Sanatana Dharma involve rituals, prayers, and offerings to deities. Each form of prayer carries its own significance—aarti as an offering of light, chalisa as a way to focus the mind through forty verses of praise, and stuti as hymns that glorify the divine. Together, they deepen one’s connection with God, offer spiritual guidance, and create a sacred space for reflection and devotion within the community.
